LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT

A specially rewarding aspect of last summer in Turkey was the opportunity of spending two working evenings in Ankara (over good food and drink) with both Toni Cross and Tony Greenwood. We covered a lot of ground, from libraries to maids, and they set me straight on a number of issues that had been foggy for me. Being with "the Tonies" always reminds me of how very fortunate ARIT is to have these highly capable people looking out for us in Turkey.

Communication, both in person and by other means, is crucial for ARIT throughout the year, and each year the ARIT "network" improves. Thanks to the generosity of the Ankara FARITs, 29/A Iran Caddesi now has its own fax machine, to match that in Istanbul provided a few years ago by CAORC. Moreover, Tony Greenwood is now on e-mail in Istanbul, as is Nancy Leinwand at Philadelphia Headquarters and yours truly.

Another highlight of the summer was having ARIT Newsletter Editor Charlene Longnecker and her husband David visit us at Gordian, during their first visit ever to Turkey. Having served earlier as ARIT Administrator in Philadelphia, Charlene was probably the most pre-informed, first-time visitor that either center had ever had. She can now bear additional witness to the cramped conditions of ARIT-Ankara and the magnificent view from ARIT-Istanbul (not to mention the invigorating walk up Serencebey Yokuşu).

ARIT has, in a sense, become official in Turkey. As I reported in the last Newsletter, the Ministry of Culture had approached the Institute to serve as a reviewing organization for U.S. excavations and archaeological surveys in Turkey. Negotiations took place in Ankara this past summer, and we are now moving to initiate the new procedures for work to be conducted in 1994. For those of you involved, I ask for your patience (and guidance) as ARIT assumes a new and important obligation.

It gives me great pleasure to report a new institutional member since the last Newsletter, the University of Wisconsin at Madison. We are actually welcoming Wisconsin back into the ARIT fold after a several years' absence. Special thanks are due to Sarah Moment Atis, who was instrumental in re-establishing the membership. Everyone knows that U.S. and Canadian institutions of higher learning are experiencing one degree or another of financial difficulty. No doubt some of you have to fight each year to maintain your membership. Your efforts on these lines are always much appreciated. A few memberships are currently inactive, and I hope very much that this is no more than a temporary situation, and that ways will be found, as they were at Wisconsin, to resolve the problem. If your membership does seem to stand in jeopardy, perhaps a creative reorganization of your internal funding sources would be possible, e.g., a number of departments banding together, each contributing a share of the annual dues. Similar advice might also apply to non-member institutions where there is strong sentiment for ARIT membership.

All best wishes for the current year, classes, exams, scholarship and writing, personal and professional commitments, raising money, deadlines...
Lecture Series on Archaeology in Turkey, which again has as loyal co-sponsors the United States Information Service and the Turkish-American Association:

“The Rise and Fall of Lydia” by Dr. Chris Ratté, 1992/93 ARIT-NEH Post-doctoral Fellow
“Cilician Survey and Preliminary Excavations at Kinet Heyük (ancient Issos) near Iskenderun, 1991-1992” by Dr. Marie-Henriette Gates, Bilkent University (1977-78 ARIT Fellow and Ankara Branch Director)

The final presentation in this series is the symposium on American-sponsored excavations in Turkey. This is always held in late May, when Ankara is filled with archaeologists attending the annual week-long symposium organized by the Turkish Department of Antiquities and Museums.

Three archaeologists in town for the symposium—Prof. Ken Sams, ARIT President; Prof. Mary Voigt, College of William and Mary, and Dr. Michael Rosenberg, University of Delaware, joined with me to form the 1993 Launch Grant Selection Committee. The 1993 grant was awarded to Nazım Çiček, who in September entered the Ph. D. program in chemical engineering at the University of Cincinnati.

All those library patrons mentioned at the beginning of this report would like to thank loyal friends for the donation of books, journals and offprints. High on the list of Most Loyal Contributors are Dr. Jane Scott and Dr. Gary Leiser. And at the very top is our own Dr. Ellen Kohler of the University Museum, who coordinates the entire program.

Goldman’s Excavations at Gözlü Kule, Tarsus Vol. 3: The Iron Age (Plates only) still heads the Wanted List, followed by:

M.S. Venit, Greek Painted Pottery from Naukratis in Egyptian Museums, ARCE, Ancient Naukratis Project 6, (Winona Lake, 1988)

In addition, books and offprints on Byzantine and, especially, early Islamic pottery, would be much appreciated.

ISTANBUL FRIENDS OF ARIT ACTIVITIES

The Friends’ 1993 Spring and Summer season was highlighted by two events: the Ninth Annual Friends of ARIT Dinner and a Kurban Bayrami trip to Eastern Turkestan. Lectures and in-country tours filled up the rest of what was an extremely busy and productive time for the Friends.

The Annual dinner was held this year in March in the Marmara Hotel. The theme for the evening was Russian and the 200 or so guests were invited to come dance the “Balalaika Boogie.” Russian caviar and vodka (so readily available on the streets of Istanbul these days) were offered alongside a Russian menu to the accompaniment first of a strolling balalaika group and then a large dance orchestra. As always the generous support of friends in the Istanbul business and diplomatic community made possible an attractive array of food. They donated auction and raffle items, including airline tickets to Moscow, Copenhagen, San Juan and Cairo, and a beautiful Russian samovar.

The presence in Istanbul of an expert on Chinese Muslims, Dru Gladney, inspired the preparation of perhaps the most adventurous and complex of Friends’ trips so far: a 9-day expedition to Xingiang province in China over Kurban Bayrami in late May. The “FARIT Devils on the Silk Route” flew into Urumqi on China Air from Istanbul, using that as a base went on to Kashgar and then to Turpan, and then returned via Alma Ata in Kazakhistan. Certainly we all have our own favorite memories from a trip as stimulating and varied as this, but no doubt somewhere at the top of everyone’s list would be the day (the last Sunday before the Kurban) spent among the crowds at the Kashgar Sunday Bazaar, the trip to Mahmud al-Kashgar’s tomb, the Bhuddist grottos in the Flaming Desert, the abandoned mud-brick cities of Turpan, the final banquet, the sheep’s head dinner in the Khazak yurt, and last but not least, the desperate hours spent in the Urumqi airport wondering if we were ever going to be allowed to leave. Happily, of course, we were (after endless and exhausting pleading by our guide), and now we have to face the equally disturbing prospect of not knowing how we will ever manage to get back to see and experience more of this fascinating area.

Other in-country tours were less involved but equally interesting and informative. In February there was a tour of historic foreign consular buildings in Istanbul, in March a trip to Greece (organized by FARIT-Ankara), in April a trip to Amasya, Tokat and Sivas led by former ARIT fellow, Sara Wolper-Viebrock, and in August a tour of three major Byzantine church complexes in Istanbul led by ARIT fellow Robert Ousterhout. Other trips led by ARIT associates, to Sardis and Aphrodisias, and to Alanya and environs, were also announced but had to be canceled for lack of sufficient participation. In addition the Friends sponsored two lectures, one by Dru Gladney entitled “ Xinjiang and the Eastern Turkistanis in Turkey: Comparing the Kazakh, Uyghur and Dungan,” and one by FARIT fellow David Roxburgh entitled, “Lifting the Veil from the Face of Depiction: Art Collecting and the Istanbul Albums.”

In recent years funding from the Friends has become an increasingly important element of the ARIT fellowship programs. This past academic year the Friends funded one of the Dernek’s post-doctoral fellowships for Turkish academics ($2,500) and the equivalent of roughly three ARIT fellowships ($10,200). This record-level of fellowship giving is further evidence of the FARIT commitment to support of what they consider an essential part of ARIT’s mission. In addition the Friends also funded the purchase of a second and faster computer, intended principally to help in the ongoing computerization of the library, and of a fax/modem, intended
ARIT-ISTANBUL BRANCH NEWS

One of ARIT’s most important activities in Turkey is the funding of the Dernek’s fellowship program for Turkish academics. Every winter the Dernek advertises the availability of funds to support research to be done in Turkey by Turkish scholars at the doctoral and post-doctoral levels in the humanities and social sciences. Given the almost complete lack of funding resources here in fields like history and archaeology, especially at the doctoral research level, this program has had an enthusiastic reception and over the years hundreds of Turkish academics from all of the major Turkish universities have availed themselves of these grants in the early stages of their careers. In the past, because numerous grants were made and the resources available were limited, the size of the grants was sometimes not large enough to make a critical difference in the feasibility of projects. In recent years the Dernek has attempted to address this problem by advertising a fixed number of grants, the value of each award set roughly at the equivalent of two to three months’ salary, lower for doctoral candidates and higher for faculty. This past May two post-doctoral and six doctoral grants were awarded as follows:

Prof. Dr. Ayda Arsl, Dokuz Eylül University, İzmir, “Research on Menşe Eli.”
Erhan Ayvancu, Marmara University, “The Defterhane.”
Engin Akyürek, Istanbul University, “The Relation of Liturgy to Architecture in the Medieval Byzantine Era.”
Dr. Nur Balkan-Atlı, Istanbul University, “Socio-Cultural Investigation Based on Archaeological Evidence of the Obsidian-producing Kömürçü Region of Göllü Dağı in Central Anatolia.”
Dr. Lâle Bulut, Ege University, “14-15th Century Beylik and Early Ottoman Period Ceramics from the St. John Basilicus Excavations, Ephesus.”
Dr. Gönül Egeli, Istanbul University, “Karaz Culture Pottery from Tepecik.”
Bedia Yelda Olcay, Hacettepe University, “Glass work of the Byzantine Period in Turkey.”
Alaeddin Yalçınkaya, Istanbul University, “Turkistan in the Context of Pan-Islamism and the Commonwealth 1864-1922.”

Spring activities at the Institute included the following lectures:

Chris Ratté, “The Identification of the Tomb of Alyattes”
Scott Redford, “Saints, Sufis and Simpletons in Medieval Anatolia”
Jamal Elias, “God’s Face Through the Looking Glass: the Relationship between God and Universe in 14th/15th Century Sufi Thought”

Small but immensely important improvements occurred in kitchen life this past spring. First we brought hot water to the kitchen with a small electric heater. No more heating water on the stove for the dirty dishes! We also switched the stove over to bottled gas. For the past year or so the city gas had become more than unreliable, and one had to do most of one’s cooking on a small portable bottled gas burner. Now the main stove works on bottled gas with much greater intensity than it ever had before. Soon the city will connect natural gas lines to our building and we will switch over to that.

Yet another added comfort has come to the living room. Our couch, which had been complaining of overuse for some time, finally collapsed irreparably in mid-summer. An emergency plea to the Friends for a replacement was answered in timely fashion by JUSMAT, which gave us a seven piece couch set and a refrigerator. Guests now have more room to store their food, and comfortable lounging space at the end of a hard day.

Dr. Ellen Kohler has started to work on some of the gaps in Istanbul ARIT’s collection, and the results have been dramatic. She is already our number one donor for the year by far. She began with the Harvard Loeb Classics, to our collection of which she has now added the following:

Diodorus of Sicily
Hippocrates
Tacitus
Aristotle - Generation of Animals
Vitruvius
Pliny - Letters and Panegyricus
Pliny - Natural History
Libanius
Greek Lyric
Quintus Curtius - History of Alexander

ARIT’s most wanted list has not changed dramatically since last advertised. From that list we have received one volume of Mahmud al-Kashgari’s Compendium of the Turkish Dialects and one of Muqarnas (our thanks to R. Dankoff and M. Simpson). Other items still sought, and still toppled by Hasluck, are the following:

Hasluck, F.W., Christianity and Islam under the Sultans
B. Battuta, The Travels (the English translation)
Khazanov, A.M., Nomads and the Outside World
Lajou, A., Peasant Society in the Late Byzantine Empire
Liddell & Scott’s Greek-English Lexicon with supplement
Mahmud al-Kashgari, Compendium of the Turkish Dialects. (trans. & ed. by R. Dankoff), part 1

Muqarnas: An Annual on Islamic Art and Architecture, Vol. 2
The Princeton Encyclopedia of Classical Sites
Ramsay, W.M., The Historical Geography of Asia Minor

A new addition is Lewis and Holt, Historians of the Middle East (Oxford, 1962).

ARIT-ANKARA BRANCH NEWS

In winter, the Ankara library was frequently packed with diligent researchers, both Turkish and American. It is always a pleasure to welcome library patrons, who range from university freshmen to senior scholars. Many of the Turkish undergraduates are students in the Department of Archaeology and Art History at Bilkent University, which now boasts more than ten full-time faculty members. One of them is Dr. Steve Lumsden, who had stayed at ARIT in 1983 while preparing his dissertation. This spring, Steve held a weekly class at ARIT, to provide hands-on training in library research.

In April and May, the Branch presented its 13th Annual to speed up communication of FARIT activities to the local community by broadcasting of faxes.

ANKARA FRIENDS OF ARIT ACTIVITIES

Thanks to the continued support of Honorary President Mrs. Nina Barkley and the hard work of the Steering Committee, the Ankara Friends were able to sponsor a successful program of activities.

Some forty Friends enjoyed the Annual Carpet, Copper and Kilim Show & Tell, a great way to escape the doldrums of a gloomy January afternoon, especially with resident expert Ann Robbins on hand to share her knowledge of Turkish handicrafts.

On March 16, the hostel flat was packed with Friends eager to hear Dr. Leslie Peirce speak of “Royal Women and the Imperial Harem: Information from the Ottoman Archives on the Role of Women in Political Life.” A member of the Department of Near Eastern Studies at Cornell University, Dr. Peirce’s research in the Ottoman archives now housed in the National Library was supported by Fulbright and SSRC grants.

The long Şeker Bayram holiday in March was the perfect opportunity for the Friends’ first trip to Greece, led by Susan Petakis, an archaeologist teaching at Bilkent University and member of the Friends’ Steering Committee. A trip highlight was a visit to the American School of Classical Studies at Athens, where the Friends were shown the marvelous libraries, then treated to a reception. In April, a lucky group of Friends toured the churches and underground cities of Cappadocia with Dr. Charles Gates, also of Bilkent University and a member of the Steering Committee, as well as a former Ankara Branch Director.

For the past few years, Dr. Robert Bridges has led a group of resident scholars and graduate students from the American School at Athens on a spring tour of central Turkey. This May, the Friends hosted a cocktail reception at ARIT for the ASCS group, to enable them to meet Turkish colleagues in Ankara.

And in May the Friends once again organized their most popular activity, the archaeology symposium on the American contribution to Turkish archaeology. The largest audience ever—close to 400 people—gathered in the theater of the Turkish-American Association to hear reports on 12 of the American projects carried out in 1992:

APHRODISIAS, Prof. R.R.R. Smith, New York University
ANEMORIUM SURVEY, Prof. James Russell, University of British Columbia. President of the Archaeological Institute of America
DENDROCHRONOLOGY PROJECT, Prof. Peter Kuniholm, Cornell University
ELMALI & TROY, Prof. Machteld J. Mellink, Bryn Mawr College. Immediate Past President of ARIT
GÖLTEPE, Dr. Ayşahan Yener, Smithsonian Institution
GORDION, Prof. G. Kenneth Sams, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. ARIT President

HACI NEBİ TEPE, Dr. Gil Stein, Northwestern University
HALLAN ÇEMİ, Dr. Michael Rosenberg, University of Delaware
KAZANE HÖYÜK, Dr. Patricia Wattenmaker, University of Virginia
SARDIS, Prof. Crawford H. Greenewalt, University of California-Berkley
TİTRİŞ HÖYÜK, Dr. Guillermo Algaze, University of California, San Diego
ULUBURUN SHIPWRECK, Celal Pulak, Institute of Nautical Archaeology, Texas A&M and Bodrum

This was followed by the Friends’ reception for all archaeologists working in Turkey, in town for the week-long Symposium. The reception was held at the Residence of U.S. Embassy Deputy Chief of Mission Jim Holmes, whose wife Connie serves on the Steering Committee. The party was a great success, thanks to: 1) our gracious and exceedingly generous hosts, Jim and Connie Holmes; 2) USIS-Ankara, who co-sponsored the reception; 3) hard-working members of the Steering Committee, led by Patricia Ülkü, and 4) Mother Nature, who for once graced our garden party with perfect weather. Our sincere thanks to all.

The Friends once again made substantial contributions to the Ankara Branch, most important being the rent and utilities of the hostel flat. Individual Friends donated many items to the hostel, including furniture, a complete set of dishes, a coffee maker, a toaster oven and, most popular with hostel guests, a stereo tape system and a color TV, now hooked to the cable system. Most popular with ARIT staff is Ankara’s own new fax machine—which made it possible for the Branch report to arrive in time to be included in this Newsletter!

REPORTS FROM ARIT FELLOWS

Elizabeth Kosmetatou, pre-doctoral, Department of Classics, University of Cincinnati.

A generous ARIT grant enabled me to conduct research on my Ph.D. dissertation in Turkey during the fall of 1992. My dissertation project is entitled “The Public and Political Image of the Attalids of Pergamon. Studies of Inscriptions, Monuments, and Coinage (281-133 B.C.).” The Turkish government generously gave me proper resident and research permission, while the staff of several Museums allowed me to see all relevant material that I needed.

I traveled to several sites and Museums in Turkey. During the time that I worked on the material which I gathered during my research trips, I resided at ARIT in Istanbul. I also used the library of the DAI, Abteilung Istanbul. The German Institute has an exquisite archaeological library, and its German and Turkish staff were always kind and helpful.

Archaeological material from Pergamon is stored at the site of Pergamon, the Bergama Museum, the Izmir Archaeological Museum, and the Istanbul Archaeological Museum. I was able to see and photograph all monuments which are associated with the Attalid kings and to make squeezes of all Hellenistic inscriptions which mention their activities. The Museum staff at Bergama were particularly helpful and kind. The director himself allowed me to study and make squeezes of inscriptions, some of which were on display at the Museum.

Information on Attalid foreign policy in Asia Minor can also be obtained from political documents, preserved on inscriptions, as well as from the Pergamene building projects in other cities of the area.

One of my most important achievements was my tour of the valley of the ancient river Caicus, near Pergamon. The Attalid rulers chose this area for colonization, particularly in the second century B.C. Several modern Turkish villages are built near the ruins of those ancient cities. The Pergamene kings usually chose an already existing city for refoundation. They settled Macedonian mercenary troops to keep peace and control the area for them. There is ample information about life in such colonies from inscriptions and ancient literary sources. Attalid refoundations were also renamed, usually after one of the founder-kings or a member of his family (Attaleia, Philetaira, Apollonia, etc.). This tour was particularly instructive and useful for my research. I acquired a sense of “geography” of the area. The geographical importance of a certain location was determined by its proximity to the borders with neighboring and frequently hostile kingdoms (Bithynia, the Seleucids), or to politically sensitive and economically important areas. These were the reasons for its choice for colonization and financial and political support by the Attalids.

I have to thank ARIT for the opportunity it gave me to conduct the most important part of my research and for their confidence in my work. I was able to travel a lot in Turkey and visit many more intriguing sites. I met people in my field, interacted with Turkish archaeologists, and got to improve my Turkish and learn more about modern Turkish culture. My dissertation is now in advanced stages, and thanks to this research trip in Turkey, I should be able to finish it sometime in the next academic year. I will provide ARIT with any resulting future publication.

Guy Rogers, Asst. Prof., Department of History, Wellesley College

Through a generous grant from ARIT I was able to continue research in Turkey during the summer of 1992 on my book The Gift and Society in Roman Asia. This book is essentially a study on how and why benefactors gave their benefactions to the poleis of the Roman province of Asia from 133 BCE until the 4th century CE. In my book, I examine how the concept of euergetism developed during the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, leading to the formation of the three different interpretive models of gift-giving which historians have used to explain how and why euergetism developed during the Hellenistic and Roman periods. I have set out the assumptions which I believe these models make and have suggested some qualifications in the first chapter of my book.

Having completed this preliminary work, I set out to Turkey in July of 1992 to examine the inscriptions at the city sites which provide most of our information. I was able to examine a large proportion of the 150 inscriptions relating to public gifts in the province on site. This was absolutely essential, given the fragmentary condition of many of the inscriptions. In many cases I also was able to establish where such inscriptions were originally set up in the cities. This constitutes invaluable information, and may lead to some interesting conclusions about the association of benefactors and benefactions with particular urban contexts. I was also able (despite being rather ill) to venture to sites in Pamphylia and Lycia (including Patar, Xanthos, Side, Perge, Aspendos), which provide crucial examples of parallel euergetistic practices in Asia during the imperial period. I am in the process of reviewing the evidence I gathered.

Preliminary analysis of material I examined in Turkey reveals that the title of benefactor (euergetes) was bestowed for specific types of public gifts in the cities of the Roman province, although the word euergetes could also be used to describe private exchanges of various kinds. Men and women were thus honored by the poleis or demoi, usually, but not always, on or near their benefactions, especially if these benefactions involved buildings. Euergetes inscriptions tend (as we might expect) to cluster around large public buildings in the cities, and it is perhaps useful to think of these inscriptions as competitive personal advertisements. I still have much work to do on the question of how much of the infrastructure of these cities actually came into being as a result of these gifts. One surprising result of the research thus far is the discovery of the extent to which many major projects, such as gymnasia, theatres, and aqueducts, were paid for by a combination of private philanthropy and public subscription lists.

I would like to take the opportunity to thank ARIT for its long term support. In 1985 I received a grant from ARIT which allowed me to travel to the site of Ephesus and complete my doctoral dissertation on the festival foundation of C. Vibia Salutaris. My doctoral dissertation, "Founding an Identity: C. Vibia Salutaris and Ephesos in A.D. 104" formed the basis of my book, The Sacred Identity of Ephesos: Foundation Myths of a Roman City (London 1991). My book was awarded the Routledge Ancient History Prize for 1989. ARIT has now helped me to carry out research for my next book, The Gift and Society in Roman Asia. I hope that this second book will turn out as well, if not better than the first. None of this research would have been possible without your euergetism.

ARIT-NEH FELLOWSHIP REPORT

Christopher Ratté, Asst. Professor, Department of Classics, New York University

My year as an ARIT-NEH fellow in Turkey was a most productive one, in regard both to the research that I set out to do, and to the new opportunities that came my way in the course of the year. My project was to continue my work on the architecture of the Archaic period (the 6th and 5th centuries B.C.) at Lydian Sardis, and I began the year in mid-July, 1992 by returning to Sardis, where I supervised a geophysical survey of Kurniyark tepe, one of the large Archaic burial mounds near the ancient city. While at Sardis, I also re-examined a group of architectural terracottas found in recent years on the slopes of the acropolis, which give important new evidence for the chronology of roof tiles and clay revetments in Lydia.

In Istanbul I settled into a small but comfortable room in the ARIT-hostel in Beşiktaş. Then followed three very fruitful months, much of them spent in the marvelous library of the German Archaeological Institute, during which I completed the study begun earlier at Sardis of architectural terracottas and wrote a separate article on Archaic Lydian gravestones, a subject which I had become interested in because of the similarities between the decoration of these grave stones and Lydian architectural ornament. At the same time, I also took advantage of the opportunity to improve my Turkish, by taking lessons at Boğazici University, and to improve my knowledge of Istanbul, not only ancient, but also Byzantine and Islamic. In these respects, I learnt a great deal from my fellow ARIT fellows, most of whom were students of Islamic history and art.

I returned to the United States, where I gave a paper on Lydian architectural terracottas at the Annual Meeting of the Archaeological Institute of America. Back in Istanbul, I continued my research on Lydian architecture, and completed a draft of a monograph on the tomb of Alyattes, Lydia's penultimate king. Early spring is also lecture season in Istanbul, and hardly a week passed when I did not attend a lecture at the German, French, Dutch, or Swedish Institute. I even gave a few lectures of my own, at ARIT in Istanbul, and then on a trip to Ankara, at Bilkent University and, under the auspices of ARIT, at the Turkish-American Association; my subjects were “The rise and fall of Lydia,” and “The identification of the tomb of Alyattes.”

In April, opportunity knocked, and I was appointed field director of the excavations of Aphrodisias, sponsored by New York University (the overall director of the project is Prof.
R.R.R. Smith, and my job is to supervise new excavations and other field research).

Before the excavation season began, I made a quick trip to Greece—where I was able to discuss our plans at Aphrodisias with the directors of the excavations at Corinth, and the Athenian agora. We then started work at Aphrodisias in early June, and continued until late August.

I returned to America in late August, 1993, pleased to have completed some research projects, to have made substantial progress on others, and to have met many new colleagues and friends, associations which will continue to bear fruit for many years to come.

AMERICAN-TURKISH FRIENDSHIP
COUNCIL

The Annual conference of the ATFC will be held January 13-15, 1994, in Washington, D.C. at the Grand Hyatt Hotel. The Cultural Symposium will be held on the morning of January 15. The Annual ARIT Lecturer at this occasion will be Professor Robert Mark of Princeton University, speaking on “Aghia Sophia from the Age of Justinian to the Present: A Technical-Historical Survey.”

During fall, 1993, the ATFC and the Smithsonian Institution, Resident Associates program, are co-sponsoring a (sold-out) series of subscription lectures on “Archaeology in Turkey.”
Most of the speakers are past ARIT Fellows or in other ways associated with the Institute: Ann Gunter on the Hittites; Aslihan Yener on her work in the Tauros mountains at Kestel and Göltepe; Crawford Greenewalt, Jr. on Sardis; Brian Rose on Troy; R.R.R. Smith on Aphrodisias; and the ARIT President on Gordion.

NEW TELEPHONE NUMBERS IN TURKEY

Over the summer, Turkey began shifting to a new system of telephone numbers that gives each province a three-digit area code. In places where the basic phone numbers did not have seven digits, changes in the numbering have occurred. Istanbul has received two area codes: 212 for the European side (numbers starting with 2 & 5), 216 for the Asian side (numbers starting with 3 & 4). The new area code for Ankara is 312.
Others: Adana (322), Afyon (272), Antalya (242), Bursa
(224), Çanakkale (286), Gaziantep (342), Konya (332), Malatya (422), Manisa (236), Urfa (414).
